JACK O'BRIEN.

Something of Interest About The Noted Fighter From Quakertown.

WILL MEET AL KAUFMANN.

This Scrapper is a Real Estate Owner And and is Also an Attorney At Law.

"Joseph Hagan, gentleman." "Jack O'Brien, fighter." This is the dual role assumed by Joseph Hagan, lawyer, real estate broker and cultured gentleman of Philadelphia, who for the nonce is in San Francisco busily training for a bout with Ai Kaufmann a fighter of

The Philadelphian is the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde of pugdism. In the ring he is Jack O'Brien, a cruel, crafty, rejentless

Out of the ring he is Joseph Hagan suave, genteel, polite and the embodiment of polite accomplishments.

Surve, genteel, polite and the embodiment of polite accomplishments.

O'Brien or Hagan, according to the mood, is playing many parts, and in the game of life is an actor of undoubted saill. As a fighter O'Brien is a marvel. As a business man Joseph Hagan is shrewd, calculating and penetrating.

He is as smooth as a Philadelphia lawyer, having been admitted to the Pennsylvania bar.

The Philadelphian is the Beau Brummel and Admiral Crichton of the ring. Hagan or O'Brien is a faddist. Jack sports all the latest in haberdashery, and on dress parade he is almost a perfect model of the latest vogue in the world of dress. To hear him discuss fads and fancies one might take this rather hands me Philadelphian as an advance agent for El Figaro El Faddist, or some of the other French fashion publications. But when Mr. O'Brien opens up the floodgates of his oratory on jabs, left hooks, the Kurowi killer and other noted blows, it is presto change! and behold the highest type of middleweight scrapper.

In the old days Paris of Troy was there with the glad rags. Paris was always there with his trousers creased and the latest adornments in garish apparel. O'Brien is the modern Paris. He knows exactly what the proper fashions are and wears them.

On the street O'Brien would pass for anything else but a puglist. In the ring one would think O'Brien knew no other calling but fighting.

As a fighter or business man O'Brien has virtues. He is good at either occupation.

When it comes to dressing Waldere Kirk in his more palmy days never sported much more garish costumes than is this Philadelphia scrapper wont to display when o dress parade. He has the clothes for the occasion, and whether at a theater party, the guest at a social function or the cynosure of curious eyes. O'Brien is sure to attract attention as being well dressed.

He is as particular about his apparel as the prima donna of a leading opera is about her costume, and when he enters a city he is followed by enough trunks to make one suspect that he has charge of a thea
